Project Overview and Motivation

Project Overview & Objectives

- 3-page portfolio (Home, Projects, Blogs)
- Built with HTML, CSS & JS
- Responsive, interactive, API-connected & publicly deployed

Perosnal Motivation

- Wanted a site that not only showcases curated collection of my best work, skills, and accomplishments, but also genuinely reflects my personal aesthetic.

Technical Deep Dive

Most challenging aspects & Innovative solutions

- Nested blog filters — the University filter reveals sub-buttons → required two layers of event listeners and parent-category tracking
- Performance — original profile image was 1.5MB. → converted to WebP bringing it under 200KB; added loading="lazy" across all off-screen images.
- Fixed navbar scroll offset — clicking nav links jumped content behind the 72px navbar. → Solved with a custom smoothScrollTo() that subtracts navbar height before scrolling.
- Travel and Global Research blog sections have filter buttons but no content yet
- Dark/light mode toggle → Future Implementation

Technical Deep Dive

Lessons learned

- The difference between writing code that works vs. code that is maintainable (CSS variables, separate stylesheets per page)
- Responsive design is not just one breakpoint — different sections (timeline vs grid vs cards) each needed their own mobile rules
- API integration teaches you to always handle failure — the internet is unreliable

Conclusion

Project outcomes and achievements

- Built a fully deployed, responsive, API-integrated portfolio that genuinely represents you
- Practiced & Developed my web dev skills from frontend, to backend and API integration.
- Posted my portfolio in public social media posts and got 2 internship offerings!

Future improvements and extensions

- Improve both performance and security
- Add a Light Mode version
- Add more to the Blogs Page and make it more interactive

So this portfolio goes beyond a collection of projects—it's a space where my work and my identity come together.

Thank you!
